The book is divided into three parts.

- Part One provides an overview of the integrative model.
- Part Two describes the different levels of need and provides guidance on how to assess and meet the needs of individuals at each level.
- Part Three discusses the implications of the integrative model for policy and practice.

The integrative model is based on the premise that all individuals have the same basic needs, regardless of their disability. These needs include the need for food, shelter, clothing, education, healthcare, and social interaction. However, the way that these needs are met will vary depending on the individual's level of disability.

The integrative model identifies five levels of need:

1. Basic needs: These are the most basic needs, such as food, shelter, and clothing.
2. Developmental needs: These are the needs that are necessary for the individual to grow and develop, such as education and healthcare.
3. Social needs: These are the needs that are necessary for the individual to participate in society, such as social interaction and recreation.
4. Vocational needs: These are the needs that are necessary for the individual to obtain and maintain employment.
5. Spiritual needs: These are the needs that are necessary for the individual to find meaning and purpose in life.

The integrative model provides guidance on how to assess the needs of individuals at each level and how to develop and implement individualized plans to meet those needs. The book also discusses the implications of the integrative model for policy and practice.

An Integrative Model By Level Of Need is a valuable resource for anyone who works with or cares for people with disabilities. This book provides a comprehensive framework for understanding and addressing the needs of individuals with disabilities and is essential reading for anyone who wants to make a difference in the lives of people with disabilities.
