What is a secured transaction?

A secured transaction is a transaction in which a debtor gives a creditor a security interest in collateral to secure the payment of a debt. The security interest gives the creditor the right to take possession of the collateral if the debtor defaults on the debt.

What are the different types of security interests?

There are two main types of security interests: liens and security interests. A lien is a security interest that attaches to specific property. A security interest is a security interest that attaches to all of the debtor's property.

What are the rights of a secured creditor?

A secured creditor has the right to take possession of the collateral if the debtor defaults on the debt. The secured creditor also has the right to sell the collateral and use the proceeds to satisfy the debt.

What are the defenses to a secured transaction?

There are a number of defenses to a secured transaction, including:

- The debtor did not have the capacity to enter into the transaction.
- The transaction was not entered into in good faith.
- The collateral was not properly described in the security agreement.
- The security interest was not properly perfected.
