Sarah waits for Michael at home, but she is worried about him. She knows that he is in danger, and she fears that he will never come home. Sarah's faith is tested by the war, but she never gives up hope that Michael will return to her.

After the war, Michael returns home a changed man. He is physically and emotionally scarred by his experiences, and he struggles to adjust to civilian life. Sarah is there for him, but she can see that he is still haunted by the war.
