This photo shows just a small fraction of the plastic pollution that ends up in our oceans every year. In fact, it is estimated that over 8 million tons of plastic waste enter our oceans annually.

This photo shows the human toll of plastic pollution. These children are playing in a river that is heavily polluted with plastic waste. The water is contaminated with toxic chemicals, which can cause a variety of health problems, including cancer and birth defects.

This photo shows the tragic consequences of plastic pollution for marine life. This whale was entangled in a fishing net, which caused it to drown.

This photo shows that there is hope for our oceans. These volunteers are working to clean up a beach that has been polluted with plastic waste. Their efforts are making a difference, and they are helping to protect our oceans and marine life.

This photo shows what our oceans could look like if we all worked together to reduce plastic pollution. This is a vision that we can achieve, and it is worth fighting for.

What You Can Do to Help

There are many things that you can do to help reduce plastic pollution and protect our oceans. Here are a few ideas:

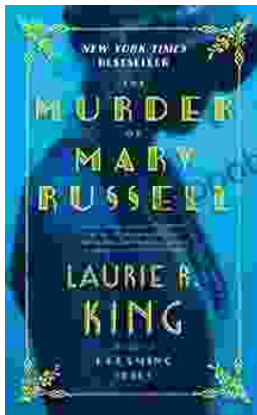

- Reduce your use of single-use plastics, such as plastic bags, straws, and water bottles.
- Recycle plastic whenever possible.
- Support organizations that are working to reduce plastic pollution.
- Spread the word about the problem of plastic pollution.

Together, we can make a difference and protect our oceans for future generations.
